

To the one and only yellow-toothed rival of mine,

I truly appreciate that this primitive guy chose to open the letter before the gift—respect. Reading the first line, you must've already guessed it's me. But still, for formalities' sake, let me introduce myself.

Hello, I'm Chandan Parasharam Kangralkar (Associate Software Engineer @ Vegam Solutions, B'lore). On the auspicious occasion of Narayan Jayanti, I've taken time out from my super "busy" schedule () to write this special letter.

Lately, life's been too good in Bangalore—hanging out with friends, running, swimming, jogging, playing, watching movies, and going places like Sindhudurg, Malvan, Sawantwadi, Shiroda, Amboli (ufff I think I'm forgetting some places... itna ghoom liya ki yaad bhi nahi rehta anymore). After such a happening and fun-filled life, if time permits, then I write letters to friends like you...

I feel sooo bad for you... you're stuck in Hubballi, spending time with lavda , lasan and pretending to be happy, you poor soul . But don't worry, even your time will come—you'll also have your "roaming spree" era one day

Belated Happy Birthday, my unsymmetrical yellow-teethed beauty
May you achieve so much in life that it starts to make me jealous on a daily basis—and that envy becomes the pressure I need to push myself harder!

You've got the full package—great body, proper abs, amazing posture (I never say this but Padya keeps bragging about it). You've got everything that could make you a Bollywood hero—except for those yellow teeth .
But don't worry... this thoughtful friend of yours got you just the thing.

Inside the gift packet, you'll find a toothpaste specially selected for your golden pearls. But there's a catch:

Before brushing, you must chant:

"Hakuna Matata, please gimme white teeth, swaaaah!"

This sacred mantra will eradicate your dental demons, and your teeth will soon shine like a bright afternoon sun (not that evening yellow filter you got going on).

Once you get that glow-up, just flash an eeee and girls will be instantly mesmerized by your radiant smile!

You're my close rival, yes, but also one of the most important people in my life. Here's to more teasing, more competition, and a friendship that's stronger than your plaque buildup.

Belated Happy Birthday, my yellow beauty!
With love, laughs, and some minty freshness,
– Chandan
